“It’s our first ever production of Jonah and the Big Fish!”
announced Sassafra, “are you ready?”

“Ready!” said Marcie, with her usual appetite for excitement.

“Wait, wait, this isn’t right. Blue paper! You want to use blue paper for water?” Mia was an artist. If it wasn’t believable she didn’t want any part of it.

“I’m not sure what you want us to do,” said the mermaid, “we already agreed—blue paper.”

“Well, then expect our first production to flop!—like a fish,” snorted Mia.

“Go with the flow,” said Titus.

The puns kept coming.

“You’re throwing cold water on our play,” laughed Sassafras.

Just then Mia stopped pacing.

“WATER, That’s it! We need REAL WATER.”

Before Hans could crow his morning wake-up call, Operation Toilet Bowl was sprawled out on the bedroom floor of Benny’s room.

“Ouch!”

“Be careful Mia.”

“What is it?” she said.

“It’s Operation Toilet Bowl, our route to getting water for our first production of Jonah and the Big Fish.” said Titus. “We’ll need Zoey’s help.”

“There he goes,” Mia said with a smile.

Hans could be heard crowing in Chloe's room.

Zoey knew that familiar sound and pulled herself out of Chloe's toy box.

As the toys gathered around, Titus gave everyone a job.

"Zoey, we'll need your wagon."

“Mia, you’re in charge of making sure the coast is clear.”

“Sassafras, do you think you can pull the wagon for us?”

“Yes sir,” said Sassafras with confidence.

“Aria, your job could be the most important one today.”

And with that, they headed down the hall.

“Hans, we only have one hour. Give us the signal when time is up.”

“There it is,” said Aria, pointing to the bathroom.

When inside everyone took a deep breath.

“Here’s the plan,” said Titus.

“Aria, I’ll reach out and place you in the toilet bowl so you can...”

“What!? No! I’m not doing it.”

“It’s clean water,” said Zoey.

“Charlie wags his tail every time he takes a drink.”

“I’m not a dog,” announced Aria.

“But if we do this quick, I think I can get the water.”

Just then Mia gave a loud snort from the hallway—it was the signal for danger.

The toys all dove behind the shower curtain, everyone but Aria.

Titus was lowering her into the toilet bowl.

Losing his grip, he accidentally dropped her in.

Shutting the lid quickly he dove behind the curtain.

A funny “HMFFFF!” came from the toilet bowl.

Chloe wandered into the bathroom. As she looked into the mirror she made a face.

Grabbing her electric toothbrush, the toys took a deep breath and relaxed.

Sassafras started to giggle. Soon the other toys joined in.

Everyone but Aria.

“HMFFFF!” came from beneath the toilet lid.

“What are we even laughing about?” asked Zoey.

“This reminds me of Jonah and the Big Fish!” Sassafras laughed.

“Why?” asked Marcie.

“Because God asked Jonah to do something he didn’t want to do.”

Another muffled “HMFFFF!”
came from the toilet.

“Just like Aria!” Hans cackled.

“Well... sort of,” said Sassafras. “God asked Jonah to go to Nineveh. The people there were making terrible choices, and God wanted Jonah to warn them.”

“Did he go?” asked Marcie.

“Nope. Jonah didn’t like the Ninevites. He wanted God to punish them, so he ran the other way and boarded a ship.”

Aria bumped against the toilet lid.

THUMP!

“Jonah’s trip got bumpy too,” continued Sassafras.

“God sent a powerful storm, and the ship tossed back and forth on the waves.”

The illustration is a creative paper craft scene. In the background, a dark blue sky with jagged yellow lightning bolts looms over a brown wooden ship with a large, light-brown sail that is partially submerged in a sea of stylized, layered blue and white waves. In the foreground, on a light blue tiled floor, stands a colorful paper rooster with a red comb, yellow beak, and feathers in shades of yellow, orange, and blue. To the right of the rooster is a white ceramic toilet with its lid up, and next to it is a purple toilet brush in its holder. A small red toy wagon with black wheels and a black handle sits on the floor near the rooster. The entire scene is constructed from various shades of blue, brown, yellow, and red paper, giving it a textured, three-dimensional appearance.

Titus rocked from side to side.
“Whoa... whoa... WHOA!”

“Eventually, Jonah was thrown overboard.”

Hans pointed toward the toilet. “Now this is starting to sound familiar.”

“HMFFFF!”

Everyone burst out laughing again.

“But God didn’t leave Jonah in the sea,” Sassafra continued. “He sent a big fish to swallow him.”

Marcie’s eyes grew wide. “Swallow him?”

“Whole!”

Titus gulped.

“Inside the fish, Jonah prayed to God. He knew he should have listened.”

“What happened next?” asked Zoey.

“After three days and three nights, God told the fish to spit Jonah onto dry land.”

“Spit him out?” Mia wrinkled her nose.

“More like vomited,” said Sassafra.

“Ewww!”

Hans sounded the all-clear.

Titus hurried to the toilet and lifted the lid.

Aria popped up, dripping wet.

“I know exactly how Jonah felt!”

Everyone roared with laughter.

“And this time,” Sassafras continued, “Jonah went to Nineveh and gave the people God’s message.”

“Did they listen?” asked Marcie.

“They did,” said Sassafras. “They turned away from what they were doing, and God showed them mercy.”

Aria climbed into Zoey's wagon and wrung the water from her hair.

"So, God cared about the Ninevites even when Jonah didn't?" she asked.

Sassafras smiled.

"Exactly."

The toys chuckled as they pulled their wagon full of water down the hall.

"I guess we have our Jonah," laughed Sassafras.

Aria rolled her eyes. Then she smiled.

Later that day, Jonah and the Big Fish made a big splash on the stage of their first ever production.

Aria took a bow.

It was the first time they ever saw a mermaid play Jonah!

The toys need real water for their first big show.

There's just one place to get it... and one very unhappy mermaid.

A laugh-out-loud toy adventure that tells the true Bible story of Jonah, and of a God whose mercy is bigger than the sea.
